SUBJECT AGREEMENT TO PARTICIPATE IN RESEARCH
Electrodermal Screening and Measurement

Electrodermal screening and measurement gathers the skin resistance at specific points located on the hands and feet. A specialized measurement device, like a galvanometer, will collect information about the functional, energetic status of the body based on reference point measurements. This technology is considered investigational and to be used at this time for research purposes.

The screening session lasts from 20 minutes to an hour, depending on how many points are measured. Follow-up screenings, usually 1-3 additional times, should supply enough information for preliminary studies.

Skin measurement is obtained with a metallic probe applied to areas of high conductivity. Pressure is applied and a small amount of current, around 6-12 micro amps, enters through the skin. A recording is then taken of the response of the nervous system at these micro dosage levels.

There may be discomfort at painful "pressure-point" areas depending on variances in stresses and pain thresholds. Skin irritation or redness may occur at the electrode placement sites.

Confidentiality regarding all test results is assured with the participant number, not name, used for any ID purposes. At any time during the project, voluntary withdrawal is assured.

Benefits to humanity from participation include gaining a better understanding of diagnoses and treatment, based on international, multi-disciplinary perspective.

I understand that if I am injured in the course of this research procedure, I alone, may be responsible for the costs of treating my injuries. I understand that I may be responsible for the costs of procedures that are solely part of the research project.

I certify that I have been told of the possible risks involved in this project, that I have been given satisfactory answers to my inquiries concerning project procedures and other matters and that I have been advised that I am free to withdraw my consent and to discontinue participation at any time without prejudice.
